AUTUMN 2006

In Praise of Nostalgia

Munchies and memories.

Our spring Pub Night on the evening of Friday, May 26 was a nostalgia-filled success. The decision to move east to Shoeless Joe's in Ajax was a popular one. We had a large upstairs room to ourselves, with lots of room to spread out year books or simply grab a drink and socialize with fellow Thomsonites. The fact that Hunter's Glen was holding its 50th anniversary the next day probably brought out a few extra celebrants, including Elaine Nicol, all the way from Toledo, Ohio. She even vowed to return for our fall session.

So, Elaine, and everyone else, set aside the evening of Friday, November 3. This time we're going to move north - well not too far north. Still in Scarborough at Tapps Restaurant, 5630 Finch Ave. E., just east of Markham Rd. on the north side. Parking is off Tapscott Rd. We hope this will entice grads from Markham, Stouffville, Uxbridge et al to drop by, plus anyone else within driving distance. There will be munchies available (to encourage our thirst!) and you can also order from the menu if you wish.

Chris Markwell, whose remembrances about the composition of the school song were featured in our last edition, was one of the more enthusiastic old-timers at the Ajax party. He sent along a very kind letter to Tradewinds editor, Stan (Mr.) Farrow:

"Hard to believe it is 47 years since A10A - virtually half a century! Just being (at the pub night) unlocked memories I have not visited in decades: Mr. Evoy's hairline; Mr. Gibson, the football coach, shouting out of the side of his mouth; you (Mr. Farrow) driving my French teacher (Miss Erickson/Mrs. Canham) to school; Ted Trevelyan's band aids; the meat pies and gravy in the cafeteria; the dusty playing field at West Hill; the smells and excitement in the halls of a new school; trudging through the snow to catch the Brimley bus.

"I had only been in Canada for 7 years in 1959, and everything still had an additional newness for me: big cars, cold winters, television, trips to the States, the Bowery Boys, a new accent, no relatives, new sports, fitting in.

"We spend so much of our time in the often petty pressures of the present that we deprive ourselves of the true pleasure of walking back into memory. Friday night was a unique opportunity to look back for an hour or so and a chance for me to share some of it with (my wife) Hazel."

Join us for an hour or more at Tapps, any time after 8:00 pm on November 3.

P.S. A special note to the Class of 1981. Consider this an invitation to make our Pub Night your 25th anniversary party. Get on the phone and put together a table of classmates to share old times.

Profile: Michael Allen

After graduating from Thomson in 1965, I started a General Science program at the U. of T. in the fall. I got totally dissatisfied and quit. I found a temporary job in the winter of 1966 with Ontario Lands and Forests in frigid White River and developed an interest in forestry. I returned to U. of T. that fall and entered a four-year Forestry Science degree program.

I could not have made a better decision. I specialized in tree breeding and genetics in my fourth year and was planning to do graduate work in that area, as I had had three consecutive summer jobs working in federal tree breeding research at Chalk River, Ontario. As fate would have it, I ran into a Forestry Masters student who had worked with CUSO in Uganda. I was mesmerized by his adventures; so I spent two years after graduation, from 1970 to 1972, with CUSO as a conservator of forests in north-eastern Nigeria, managing a work force of over 600 people. Although the Biafran war was still winding down while I was there, I nevertheless had a great experience.

I also did some work for a brief time in neighbouring Cameroun. I lived very "bush-like" with virtually no modern amenities. I spent much time in African villages and thoroughly enjoyed the experiences. I had some working knowledge of one major language and one common dialect. I became, and still am, intrigued with African shamanism. After Nigeria I spent some long holiday time in great Britain, Denmark and Sweden.

In late 1972 I enrolled in the Master of Science in Forestry program at U of T in urban and environmental forestry.

While I was doing my thesis work, I was also consulting. A word to the wise: don't do that! It's a killer combination! I finally got my Master's degree in 1977.

I was married in the spring of 1973. I had known Susan for four years. She has been an elementary school teacher for some time now. We're still happily together after 33 years! In 1982 our one and only child, James, was born.

From 1981 to 1988 I worked as a regulatory and planning superintendent with Alberta Power. It was a challenging position, as I became skilled in working court rooms and regulatory tribunals. But I wanted to get back to my urban forestry interests; so I took a job as the city forestry manager in Winnipeg in late 1988. For health reasons, I retired in September, 2002. I had a remarkable history of involvement with the media, politicians and numerous organizations and was an active leader in the Scouts movement with James for 10 years.

We have travelled all over the world, visiting a good chunk of Europe, all over the USA, every country in the Caribbean, Hawaii, Fiji, Australia and South Korea. James is now a professional environmental biosystems engineer living and working in Huntington Beach, California. He has also spent a lot of time in eastern Europe and Russia.

I now work full time in my own business, Viburnum Tree Experts, as a consulting urban forester and arborist. I work solely with myself and engage various business arborists on projects for my clients. I have also done quite a bit of writing, for popular gardening magazines, technical journals and our local newspaper in Winnipeg. I give about 40 public workshops a year on tree and shrub care techniques, including pruning, to departments of continuing education in a number of school divisions. (continued on page 4)

Fore Shadowing

Bill Milnes

Bill Milnes, Thomson's principal from 1972 to 1975, died this past summer. We asked his son, Art, to write a reminiscence. Since he was already putting together a tribute for the Globe and Mail, we agreed to publish that. Art himself was Thomson's SAC President, and valedictorian, in 1984-1985. Whenever he had meetings with Al Kerr in the principal's office, he would remember playing in the front office ten years earlier with Mrs. Hunt and Mrs. Forsythe while waiting to visit his dad. "I was probably a pain, but they never let on."

The whole family was touched when Thomson lowered the flag to honour Bill, and also allowed them to borrow his official portrait from the front hall for use at the funeral. Three former principals and countless former staff came by to pay their respects.

Art is a journalist, currently serving as research assistant to the Hon. Brian Mulroney on the former Prime Minister's forthcoming Memoirs. We hope to call upon his reminiscences again when those are published. For now, we appreciate his tribute to his father.

W.H. Milnes, teacher, principal, coach, father, friend, reader, citizen of Scarborough, Ontario. Born July 15, 1931; died August 18, 2006 of complications from diabetes.

The last words I had with my father were typical. Dad suddenly turned to me, leaned over the side of his emergency room stretcher-bed and asked: "Art, do you think Bob Rae will win the Liberal leadership?"

I was anything but shocked at his question. W.H. Milnes, whatever the situation, even to his last day, was engaged in the affairs of the nation and the world around him. Dad and I then chatted for five minutes or so about Mr. Rae and how much we both admired and respected the former Ontario premier. We never really answered the question about Mr. Rae's future - but we had one hell of a conversation.

An hour later Dad died.

At our family home in Scarborough I discovered the day's papers and saw that he'd devoured the news and opinion sections of three of Toronto's dailies before the ambulance came to take him from 12 Abbeville Road - his home of 46 years. I could also see that he was well into three books - The Circumnavigators: The Pioneer Voyagers Who Set Off Around the Globe; They Thought They Were Free: The Germans 1933-45; and Gestapo: The History of the German Secret Service.

He had bought the latter two in Connecticut only three weeks before when my brother, Bill, drove him to see my sister, Margaret's new home in historic Essex. How fitting, Dad must have thought, that his daughter's first house is located in a place where sea battles raged during both the American Revolution and the War of 1812.

Dad was a history teacher above all else. He truly loved the pages of the past. Through the thousands of his books we boxed up after his death, I saw again how he'd sailed with Nelson at Trafalgar, sat through the Long Parliament in Cromwell's time, watched Roman Legions occupy his beloved Great Britain, and read the Gnostic Gospels around desert campfires after the death of a philosopher-king he admired.

He began teaching at R.H. King Collegiate in the early 1950s, later rising to the position of principal at King and subsequently at David and Mary Thomson C.I. He then went on to serve in a supervisory role in the Scarborough Board of Education. But it was in the classroom and high school environment where his heart lay. He headed the History Club at R.H. King and spoke about it shortly before he died. We were sitting in the backyard, two steaks were sizzling on the grill and a glass of red wine was in his hand. As always, we were discussing politics and world affairs, and specifically, the war in Iraq.

I asked him where he had stood on the issue of the Vietnam War in the 1960s. "In the History Club," he said, "we debated that one night right here in this yard. I had the students over and we came down against the war."

And when he died countless former students came by the funeral home to pay their respects to their teacher. Outside the classroom Dad served as his school's football and hockey coach. My siblings and I listened in awe as one man in particular, Jack Felstead, told us story after story about Coach Milnes. Jack also told me about visiting our family home as a member of the History Club and talking about world affairs in his teacher's Scarborough yard.

After my mom died in 1995, dad began a slow withdrawal from the world. He visited the Bendale Restaurant each day and always ordered the Number 3, a special sandwich with fries that changes each day. Once the Boomers decreed that the exhaust from their SUVs and mini-vans was acceptable, but Dad's second-hand smoke a health risk, he took his food home each day - losing the one daily social contact he had - and ate by himself at our kitchen table, alone with his thoughts and his memories of teaching, and surrounded by his beloved books.

Dad especially loved visiting Gettysburg and other US Civil War battlefields on family trips. He'd read book after book beforehand so he could describe to his kids what had taken place on American hallowed ground. He also used to play hymns from that era on the record player. So when they asked what music I wanted played at his funeral service I didn't hesitate - Battle Hymn of the Republic.

I knew that John Diefenbaker, another hero of my father's from history's endless pages, had picked that hymn for his own funeral in 1979. Dad would have liked that connection. In fact, I suspect he and the Chief are up there arguing - and often agreeing - right about now.

And Dief has finally met his match.

Love at Second Sight

Last spring, we received an interesting email from Alumni member, Tom Childs. He and fellow 1976 graduate, Carolyn Kay were to be married in July. Of course, by now the wedding has taken place, the couple have honeymooned in Scotland and England, and the regular routine has resumed (more on that later). But, in the midst of too many obituaries, we thought readers would enjoy hearing how, 29 years after these yearbook photos were taken, Tom and Carolyn reconnected.

It began with the death of Carolyn's father in late spring, 2005. The interment was held in the historic cemetery at St. Andrew's Presbyterian Church. Carolyn's family were long-time members. Tom is an elder there and, as trustee of the cemetery, attends most funerals to represent the church. He and Carolyn recognized each other and agreed to keep in touch by email.

When Carolyn returned from Berlin in June, she and Tom began to date and found a special spark after all those years. Carolyn's son (his father died when he was still a baby) also took to Tom quite rapidly, and Tom intends to adopt him following their marriage.

Carolyn teaches German history at Trent University in Peterborough and in 2005 won the Symons Teaching Award, honouring her as Trent's best professor. This year she was promoted to full professor and is in the process of writing another book. On her return from their honeymoon, she learned that she had been nominated as TVO professor of the year. The prize is a $10,000 scholarship for a student studying at the winning professor's university. (She entered the competition because so few women had been nominated the year before.) If you check out the TVO website, you can find Carolyn explaining the holocaust (her special area of study) to students who would be far too young to understand, without her guidance.

Tom, meanwhile, has accepted an invitation to return to eastern Europe with a missionary team from his church. His previous visit took him to Ukraine, Hungary and Romania, seeing the work of the Reformed or Presbyterian Church. The team he led travelled to schools and orphanages where they witnessed first-hand the often-terrible price people were paying for their faith. Being sent to Siberia was no longer a joke. Tom found it very humbling compared to the comfortable, insulated life he knew in North America.

So, dear readers, you never know what's in store. Lives that are busily heading in one direction can quickly change. And, if you, like Carolyn and Tom, encounter stories (your own or others') of such interesting changes, let us know!

I have been interested in trees since I was 8 years old, but my true passion is helping people deal with problems affecting their minds and bodies. I am a Reiki master and I work as a volunteer in a large hospital as a complementary healer in their spiritual care department. Reiki is an ancient hands-on technique that helps people relax and reduce stress in their lives. I have a business (Raven Feather Reiki Teachings) in which I teach all levels of the technique. I am also trained in healing with buffalo drum - essentially a shamanic technique. My healing practice is integrated with my tree business, by using science and ancient techniques to heal gardens as well as those who own them.

May the path you travel be the one that you create.

Ruth Vanderlip

Ruth Vanderlip, a familiar and friendly face in the Resource Centre at Thomson in the 1970s, died this past summer at the age of 88. Born in Brantford, she spent most of her teaching career in Scarborough. Her unassuming manner masked a wealth of learning and wide-ranging interests. She was a chorister for many years at Timothy Eaton Memorial Church. She was a volunteer at the Art Gallery of Ontario. And her retirement travels resulted in the publication of a book, reviewed in these pages a number of years ago.

She was buried in Mount Pleasant Cemetery in a quiet corner where she had often enjoyed picnics with friends.

Ina Priller

Back in May, we were sorry to hear of the death of Ina (Staszewski) Priller, a graduate from 1964. Ina was a former teacher and community worker. Her husband,

Dr. Uwe Priller, is also a Thomson grad (1963) and is a former Thomson teacher, now a dentist. In a wonderful tribute, friends and family were invited to bring plants, shrubs or trees to be planted on the Prillers' Uxbridge-area property following the memorial service. We send our sympathies to Uwe and to the whole family.
